Rose Coghlan in "White Heather" at English's.

Two good-sized audiences welcomed Miss Rose Coghlan's return to Indianapolis yesterday after an absence of several seasons. "Diplomacy" must have been surprised, not to say shocked, to witness her in melodrama, with all the heaviness that is ascribed to British literature in cruelest jest. Viewed as a play, it has little excuse for ever having been brought into the light of day out of the brains that conceived it. Looked at as a medium for playing gorgeous scenery and magnificent costumes, it is a success, but one cannot help wondering why such expenditure was lavished on a piece that is so little | Tears." worth while. The Scotch moor, Battersea Park, the coast view, the dissolving marine tableau and the fancy dress ball at Shetland House are all of the highest types of scenic art. There are several capable people in Miss Coghlan's company. W. D. Chalfin, as James Hume, displays considerable talent as a character actor. Miss Georgia Lawrence, as Lady Molly Fanshaw, is decidedly refreshing in the midst of the regnant stupidity around her. Mr. John W. World, as Edgar Trefusis, contributes largely to the comedy element of the piece. Mr. World and Miss Lawrence appear in a song and dance specialty that wins them much applause. There are some very artistic groupings that reflect great credit upon the stage director. Miss Coghlan succeeded in the third act in getting enough out of her meager role to earn several hearty curtain calls. "White Conn. Jan. 10. Heather" may be seen at one more per-formance, to-night. It will be followed by Andrew Robson in "The Royal Box" for a single performance Thursday night.

"Two Orphans" at the Grand.

In spite of the competing attractions, the Grand stock company played to two large audiences yesterday afternoon and last night. Just how the members were able, within a week, to prepare such a finished first performance of a play as that given at yesterday's matinee is wellnigh incomprenensible. And yet there was scarcely any hesitation observable by even the principals, all being apparently letter-perfect in their lines. Opportunities for excellent work by a large per cent. of the stock company are afforded by "The Two Orphans." Messrs. Kolker and Macy, Claude Brooke, Herman Sheldon and Wright Kramer all appeared to high advantage, and reaped bountiful harvests of praise. Miss Shannon gave a quite faithful and pleasing portrayal of Louise, the poor blind girl, while Miss Donico, in the role of Henriette, sister to Louise, surpassed all her previous efforts. Miss Willa Martin handled her two roles of Marianne, the outcast, and Florette, a society woman, as if the assumption of such responsibilities were an everyday occurrence with her. Miss Rand also won large measure of applause in a dual role. Miss La Verne had the largest part that has yet been given son and made a most favorable impression her, that of Mother Frochard, and it is not seen how more could have been made of it. As a piece of clever character work Miss La Verne's delineation of this disagreeable old woman should take high rank. usual interest and numerous complications. In the hands of the stock company it has | where they spent so much of their leisure been surrounded by scenic accessories such | time. as it probably never had in any of its road presentations. The scenes of Acts 2 and 4, showing the chateau gardens and exterior of St. Sulpice Church, respectively, were ence caught sight of them. Some exceptionally handsome costumes were worn by both the men and women of the company

The effect of the actor's work was many instances almost ruined by the antics of a hysterical young miss near the front of the house, who persisted in weeping audibly whenever mock misfortune chanced to befall a character in the piece. People whose emotions interfere with others' enjoyment of a performance should be quietly escorted from the theater.

Miss Dolores was prevented from sharing in the company's triumph his week by the death of her father in the East, whither she has gone to attend the funeral. "The Two Orphans" continues the rest of the week, with usual Wednesday and Sat-

Fulgora's Vaudeville Stars at Park.

Fulgora's American and European Vaudeville Stars had a powerful counter attracbut they held their own surprisingly well. At intervals the progress of the performance was interrupted by the appearance on the stage of Charles A. Layman, holding a number of sheets of white paper containing news of the McCoy-Maher fight. When he roared at the top of his voice, "McCoy wins," pandemonium broke loose.

The performance given by Mr. Fulgora's seum, company is indeed stellar in many particulars. Little Fred and his troupe of trained animals-not forgetting the pig-contribute an entertainment that would save even an otherwise hopelessly bad performance. Nothing like it has ever been seen at the Park, and the act received the applause it richly merited. The Hunting Trio, in an acrobatic comedy dance turn, and Barnes and Sission in a musical skit entitled "A Marriage Broker," were good. Billy Van. who is always funny, did his talking just before the intermission. Following the intermission the Brothers Forrest, eccentric musical clowns, held the stage until they had to beg off on account of weariness. Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Sidman appeared in a humorous and pathetic sketch, "Back ome," which was generously applauded. The hit of the entire performance, however, was the act contributed by Jennie Gassman and her little pickaninnies, especially the latter. The little mites of The strength of the hope we leaned upon, chocolate-colored flesh did some turns that stamp them as born entertainers. The audience fairly howled itself hoarse over this We fret for the things that might have be act. usual day and evening performances. Twentieth Century Maids.

"The Twentieth Century Maids" ob served New Year's at the Empire Theater yesterday afternoon and the dozen or more young women of various types of beauty entertained a large crowd. The occasion was the opening by Harry Morris's company of its three days' engagement here. The theater was packed and a number of people saw the show from the stage. A telegraph operator in one of the boxes received the news from the prize fight in New York, the returns being read from the stage by Manager Zimmerman.

The performance given by the Morris Company has a sufficient number of suging for off-color sayings and doings interested. Harry Morris and Violet Clemence a rather amusing travesty on Rostand's also a very busy person in the opening of club life. Miss Clemence is a vocalist of more than ordinary ability. In the olio she is one of the Clemence Sisters, who are billed as the "vocal queens." Liey sing "The Palms" very creditably and follow lancing. The Johnson trio, including Nellie Fenton, Charles Johnson and Florence Wrag-land, came next in a schoolroom durlesque which closed with some lively dancing. Lily Perry and Marie Hyland, singing and dancing soubrettes, entertained the austage to Perry and Burns, Irish comedians. After the singing and dancing of the Clemence Sisters, the Knight Brothers, in a rather high-class singing and dancing ored swells, close the olio. The company will give matinees to-day and to-morrow.

George Primrose talks entertainingly about dancing in a New York paper. He says that about one in five hundred people ought to be able to make good dancers with proper training. He gives the colored race a dab by saying that, while it comes natural for the darkies to shuffle their feet, a real artistic dancer among them is a rarity.

Louise Hepner and Dorothy Usner have compromised their suits against the Shanleys, New York restaurant proprietors, for damages on account of being denied admission to a restaurant. The reason given by the Messrs. Shanley for refusing to allow the actresses to dine at their tables was that Miss Hepner's blonde tresses did

There will be but one performance of "The Royal Box" at English's Thursday. It was the intention of the management to give a matinee, but the company cannot arrive in the city in time to stage the production for a matinee. Seats for this attraction and for the engagement of Stuart Robson Saturday go on sale this morning.

Kathryn Osterman, who, as already told, made a hit at Keith's Boston theater last made an arrangement with Lillian Burkhart to play Grant Stewart's piece, "To-morrow at Twelve," which is Miss Burkhart's property. Miss Osterman played in this sketch last summer with Charles Dick-

An infusion of new blood into any enterprise is always productive of good results. This is particularly true in the case of "The Royal Box," which will be given two sumptuous productions at English's Thursday matinee and evening. Andrew Robson replaced Charles Coghlan in the principal ole several weeks before the latter's death, and the majority of critics who saw him, not knowing of the change, remarked upon Mr. Coghlan's sudden accession of youthfulness, saying that they had never seen him act with so much power before. The new theater in Boston now undergoing construction for Rich & Harris and Charles Frohman, is to be called the Colonial, and will open in September next with the Empire Theater Company, of New York, as the attraction.
